Creative work and constructive development programs are precisely what are needed in all underdeveloped areas of the world. This is particularly true now that the USSR has deliberately sought to build up anti-Israel armament and antagonism in the Arab world. The answer to Soviet meddling and to Soviet-manufactured crises in the area is to concentrate on positive, productive policies in the long-term interests of the people and the region.

This kind of endeavor, not new armament races, will bring peace and progress to the Middle East.

In the midst of Middle East tensions and arms races, recent economic developments in Israel are themselves of special international significance.

Within the past month, two dramatic developments of widespread significance have occurred. The first of these was the successful completion of the drainage and reclamation project around Lake Huleh in northern Galilee. A dream of Israeli pioneers for a generation, the draining of this huge marshland is the culmination of seven years of concerted reclamation effort often conducted in the face of military threats and border raids.

also turns 15,000 acres of swampland into rich cultivable soil, and provides 65 million cubic meters of water for irrigation purposes -- all in all, a tremendous contribution to human welfare

(X) / A second historic event is the recent announcement by the Israeli government of a new four-year, $300,000,000 industrial development program. It is designed to raise Israel's annual output by at least 50% and its industrial work force by a third. In its emphasis on basic industry, production for export, modernization of equipment, and provision of new employment opportunities, this new Israeli industrial development plan should be an incentive for other new Afro-Asian nations.

FOR RELEASE: Monday
November 25, 1957

"In the midst of Middle East tensions and arms races, recent economic developments in Israel are themselves of special international significance," Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (D.-Minn.) told a Chicago audience last night. The Senator was in the city to receive the 1957 annual "America-Israel Friendship Award" from the Mizrachi Women's Organization of America.

"Within the past month, two dramatic developments of widespread significance have occurred," the Senator declared. "The first of these was the successful completion of the drainage and reclamation project around Lake Huleh in northern Galilee. A dream of Israeli pioneers for a generation, the draining of this huge marshland is the culmination of seven years of concerted reclamation effort often conducted in the face of military threats and border raids."

"The Huleh project removes a grave source of malaria infection, thereby benefitting neighboring Syria as well as Israel," Senator Humphrey said. "It also turns 15,000 acres of swampland into rich cultivable soil, and provides 65 million cubic meters of water for irrigation purposes -- all in all, a tremendous contribution to human welfare."

"A second historic event is the recent announcement by the Israeli government of a new four-year, $300,000,000 industrial development program," the Senator continued. "It is designed to raise Israel's annual output by at least 50% and its industrial work force by a third. In its emphasis on basic industry, production for export, modernization of equipment, and provision of new employment opportunities, this new Israeli industrial development plan should be an incentive for other new Afro-Asian nations."

"Creative work and constructive development programs are precisely what are needed in all underdeveloped areas of the world," Senator Humphrey stated.

"This is particularly true now that the USSR has deliberately sought to build up anti-Israeli armament and antagonism in the Arab world. The answer to Soviet meddling and to Soviet-manufactured crises in the area is to concentrate on positive, productive policies in the long-term interests of the people and the region.
