Sept. 20, 1884

Christian to JJH, General Correspondence

"Have you given up all intention of erecting a flouring mill here?" Discusses Mpls milling situation and offers to go in with Hill "with the prestige which an alliance with you would give me." Concludes: "It becomes more difficult each year to get a foothold in the trade; the older and richer concerns will before long monopolize the business and will kill off the lesser ones."
