Guide to a Microfilm Edition of

The

Northern Pacific

Land Department Records

LAND DEPARTMENT RECORDS of the Northern Pacific Railway Company is the eighth microfilm edition the Minnesota Historical Society has produced with funding from the National Historical Publications and Records Commission since the program began in 1964. The first in the series to tap the Society's business records holdings, the edition reproduces one of the many Northern Pacific series particularly rich in information about the development of the Northwest. The company’s land—millions of acres granted by the federal government to support construction of the first northern transcontinental railroad from the head of the Great Lakes in northeastern Minnesota to the Pacific Coast—was a resource commensurate with the challenge of spanning 2,000 miles of prairies, plains, mountains, and forests in sparsely occupied country. The materials filmed document the company’s efforts to wring the promised bounty from the land by selling it and promoting settlement of the country that would provide business for the road.

By the time construction of the railroad began in 1870, the resources of the vast region the line would penetrate were well known to travelers, fur traders, miners, missionaries, soldiers, and others in the white vanguard invading the Indian country. Even before 1853, when expeditions exploring a route for a transcontinental line led westward from St. Paul by Isaac Stevens and eastward from Fort Vancouver by George B. McClellan focused attention on the region, frontier boosters were predicting rapid development once the railroad was built. With this development, the St. Anthony Express commented on February 14, 1852, with typical Western optimism, the balance of power in the nation would shift to the Mississippi Valley as cities on the Atlantic Coast lost the "commanding influence which they at present exercise over the wealth and commerce of the country."
Beckoning the settlers needed to make the dream a reality was a host of promoters, including states and territories carved out of the Northwest, the federal government distributing free land under the Homestead Act, newspapers in young communities envisioning miraculous growth based on the area's productivity, colonization companies, and the railroads. The Northern Pacific's far-ranging campaign was an important factor in the effort during the early 1870s. Preparing its land for sale, employing agents abroad, organizing colonies for group migration, and advertising the riches of the "New Northwest," the railroad evolved a complex program well documented in its land department records. Promotional enthusiasm was often expressed in language so extravagant that the land-grant strip was called "Jay Cooke's Banana Belt."

Acknowledgments

Many people have contributed to producing the microfilm edition that reproduces these records. Among them are several members of the Society's staff. Deborah K. Neubeck supervised all aspects of the project. William M. Bomash edited the microfilm and wrote the guide. Tracey I. Baker organized the records and prepared them for filming. Lawrence B. Bloom, Dan Dolan, and Christine A. Leitner filmed them. Audrey D. Johnson and Catherine Creedon checked the film. Catherine A. Emkovik and Geralinde K. Nielsen assisted in other tasks. Lydia Lucas and Marion Matters edited the guide and supervised its production. Jean Kirby typed the final copy of the guide, while Susan Cogan and Sherry Wiener provided additional typing assistance. Maureen J. Leverly, Duane P. Swanson, and John M. Wickre shared their extensive knowledge of the records' content and provenance. Sue E. Holbert and Lydia Lucas provided important counsel. Russell W. Fridley, the Society's director, and John J. Wood, deputy director, continued the supportive roles they have played since the institution began producing microfilm editions sixteen years ago.

Thanks are due to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, now Burlington Northern Inc., for donating the records to the Society as well as for providing funds to establish preliminary controls over them; and to Helen M. White, former staff member who as Northern Pacific project director in 1968-1970 had a crucial role in acquisition and management of the material.

The significant contributions of the National Historical Publications and Records Commission staff are also gratefully acknowledged. Fred Shelley, former deputy executive director, initiated the project by suggesting that the Society include in its microfilming plans a unit of the Northern Pacific records documenting the railroad's impact on western settlement. Frank G. Burke, executive director, and Roger A. Bruns and George L. Vogt, director and assistant director of the commission's publications program, were unfailing in their cooperation and encouragement.
Early in the commission's program of sponsoring microfilm editions, Oliver W. Holmes, former executive director, expressed hopes that institutions participating in the program would also undertake projects on their own. In the spirit of the commission's objectives, the Society has microfilmed an additional series of Northern Pacific records. Closely related to the Land Department materials, the series is entitled "Secretary's Unregistered Letters Received and Related Records, undated and 1864-1876."

THE NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY* RECORDS reproduced in this microfilm edition measure thirteen and one-quarter linear feet and consist of four series: Land Department Letters Received and Related Records, 1870-1876; Land Department Letters Sent, 1871-1876; Printed Materials, 1821-1876; and Land Committee Minutes, 1871-1876. They represent a small but extremely rich portion of the more than ten thousand linear feet of manuscript and printed materials relating to the Northern Pacific in the collections of the Minnesota Historical Society.

The records contain a wealth of information on the establishment and daily operations of the Land Department's main office in New York City and of its local, district, and foreign offices; the acquisition, preparation for sale, and promotion of the railroad's land grant; foreign and domestic immigration to and settlement of the region tributary to the line; the region's agricultural, commercial, and industrial development; the company's financial relationship with the Philadelphia banking firm of Jay Cooke & Co., as well as the relationship between the American railroad industry in general and the national and international financial communities; the railroad's attitudes and policies toward the American Indians living on lands included in the land grant; the company's involvement in regional and national politics; social, economic, and political conditions in the United States, Europe, and Canada; and a host of related topics.

*Until 1896 the official name of the company was the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.
The major focus of this microfilm edition is the early incoming and outgoing correspondence (1870-1876) of the Northern Pacific Land Department's New York office. These two series, which together measure eleven and one-quarter linear feet, constitute a discrete record unit within the files of the Land Department. They document the activities of the department from its creation in 1871 through the company's bankruptcy and reorganization in 1875. The bulk of the correspondence covers the period 1871-1873. Major correspondents include the chairman of the Land Committee; the land commissioner (the head of the Land Department); the superintendent of emigration; the district and foreign agents; clerks and other personnel in the department's various offices; other Northern Pacific officers and employees; the company's financial agent, trustees' agent, and attorneys; politicians and government officials; colony organizers and promoters; prospective settlers; and other members of the general public. The Letters Received and Related Records are filmed on rolls 1-14; the Letters Sent appear on rolls 15-32.

While there are some printed items in the Letters Received and Related Records (as enclosures or as photocopies of originals, for example), most are in a separate collection of Printed Materials (1821-1876) measuring two linear feet. They were assembled from those originally found with the Letters Received and Related Records and augmented by selected items found elsewhere among the Northern Pacific Railway Company Records, in the Society's Reference Library, and in the Southwest Minnesota Historical Center at Marshall. These materials include pamphlets, leaflets, and circulars; maps; blank forms; newspaper clippings; government documents; and copies of federal laws. They are included in this microfilm edition, on rolls 33-37, because they provide additional documentation and background information essential to the understanding of the Land Department's organization and activities.

Minutes of the meetings of the Land Committee (1871-1876) also have been filmed on roll 37 in order to provide supplemental information about the Land Department. They are in a volume that is part of a set of corporate records originally kept by the Northern Pacific Secretary's Office. The Land Committee minutes also contain excerpts dealing with land matters from the minutes of the company's board of directors and executive committee meetings. Finally, the notes taken by the editor during the preparation of this microfilm edition are microfilmed on roll 38 as a research aid. They briefly note subjects documented in the records and list the names of significant authors and recipients.

The materials included in this microfilm edition should be used in conjunction with another group of early Northern Pacific Railway records: the Secretary's Unregistered Letters Received and Related Records, undated and 1864-1876, available on microfilm from the Division of Archives and Manuscripts. These records contain numerous items that were originally part of the records of the Land Department and, therefore, are integrally related to the records reproduced in this microfilm edition.
The Letters Received and Related Records are arranged chronologically, with partially dated and questionably dated items appearing before those that are fully dated. When two or more letters are filed under the same date, they are arranged alphabetically by name of recipient. Although attempts were made to date all undated or partially dated items prior to microfilming, it was not possible to determine with certainty the date of every such item. The reader therefore is urged to use caution when dealing with items whose dates appear in brackets.

Some exceptions have been made to the strict chronological arrangement of the Letters Received and Related Records. Whenever possible, enclosures are filed immediately after their covering letters rather than under their own dates. In certain instances, where one document contains significant information necessary to the understanding of another, a photocopy of the former is filmed together with the latter. Where this technique is used, the photocopy is accompanied by a statement identifying it as such and indicating the date under which the original is filmed. On occasion, certain groups of papers, all of which relate to a particular topic or event, are filed together under a single date or date span. These groups of papers are identified by typewritten targets.

The Letters Sent are contained in twenty-five letterpress volumes. Volumes 1-24 are arranged either by author (volumes 1-14) or by recipient (volumes 15-24). The title of each volume indicates the author(s) or the intended recipient(s) of most of the letters contained therein, as well as their inclusive dates. Volume 24 also contains a group of letters pertaining to the 1873 International Exposition at Vienna. Volume 25 consists of copies of outgoing telegrams. The letters in each volume generally are in chronological order. As an aid to the researcher, the recipient indexes that precede the letters in many of the volumes have been rearranged in a single alphabetical sequence and refilmed (together with the subject registers that are found instead of recipient indexes in four volumes) on roll 32, following volume 25.

The Printed Materials are divided into four sections, each of which represents a different type of publication: materials issued by or on behalf of the Northern Pacific Railway Company; promotional materials issued by colonization societies, land companies, and other railroads; government publications; and miscellaneous publications.

The minutes of the meetings of the Land Committee are in chronological order. The arrangement of the Editor's Notes corresponds to that of the microfilm rolls.

The 2-B (comic) film format has been used in microfilming the records; the Editor's Notes are filmed in the 1-B (comic) format. A running title beneath each film frame gives the title and publisher of the microfilm and the frame number. Targets usually identify enclosures, incomplete or seriously defective documents and volumes, and items filmed at reduction ratios other than the standard 14-to-1. Typed targets indicate the provenance of printed materials that were gathered from sources other than the Land Department Records.

The Letters Received and Related Records are generally legible and in good condition, although occasionally part of the text may be faint due to faded ink or pencil or may be obscured by ink smears and tape residue. Many of the pages in the letterpress volumes are difficult to read. In some cases, the copies appear to have been smeared, incomplete, or defective in some other way at the time of their creation. In other cases, the passage of time has caused the ink to bleed through to the adjoining pages or to fade severely.

Several techniques have been used in an effort to increase the legibility of certain items. Sometimes an item or letterpress page is filmed more than once at different camera settings, with a target identifying the intentional duplicate exposure. In a few instances, photocopies have been filmed in place of faded or otherwise defective documents when the photocopies produced superior film images. In those cases where a letterpress copy containing valuable information could not be legibly reproduced on film, a typed transcription of the text has been filmed beside the original page. No transcriptions were prepared for nearly illegible letters if they contained only routine or insignificant information, although the letters themselves are filmed.

Items that were inadvertently not filmed and those exhibiting major filming errors were refilmed with frame numbers that indicate their correct locations in the film sequence. The retakes for each microfilm roll appear at the beginning of that roll, following the introductory materials. Items mistakenly filmed only a few frames out of sequence and those with only minor errors were not refilmed.

Origin of the Collection

THE MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY'S interest in materials pertaining to the Northern Pacific Railway Company dates back to the earliest years of the company's existence. By November, 1871, the Society had collected "nearly a complete set of [pamphlets] relating to the N.P.R.R. and [intended] to have them handsomely bound."¹ This interest in collecting published works has not waned, as evidenced by the number of pamphlets from the Society's Reference Library included in this microfilm edition.

Attempts by the Society to acquire the company's corporate records began in 1930 when Solon J. Buck, superintendent of the Society and later archivist of the United States, wrote to the Northern Pacific land commissioner suggesting that "the old records of the Land Department . . . [containing] much valuable material relating to the settlement of Minnesota and the Northwest . . . be transferred to the custody of the Minnesota Historical Society [in order to make] more adequate arrangements for their permanent preservation and accessibility."¹ The Land Department records in which Buck was interested are those reproduced in this microfilm edition.

Although Buck's request was denied, the Society persevered. Several times during the ensuing years—in 1934, in the early 1940s, and in 1953—the Society's directors and manuscripts curators again proposed that the railway donate its historical records to the Society. Throughout these years the company's position remained the same: while it had no objection to making its records available to researchers, it preferred to retain custody of them.²

It was not until 1967 that negotiations regarding the transfer of Northern Pacific records to the Society began in earnest, in connection with the pending merger negotiations among the Northern Pacific, the Great Northern, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railways. An appraisal and inventory project conducted by curator of manuscripts Lucile M. Kane and assistant curator Helen M. White during 1967-1968 identified 3,500 linear feet of records as being of prime historical value. A contract governing the donation of these and subsequent selections was signed in December, 1968, and the first group of records arrived at the Society in March, 1969. Most of the records included in this microfilm edition were identified in this initial inventory and were received in 1969 and 1970.

Historical Sketch

THE NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY was chartered by the United States Congress in 1864 and empowered to construct a railroad and telegraph line along a northerly route from Lake Superior to Puget Sound. In return for building the road, the company was granted title to all the odd-numbered sections of land lying within ten miles either side of the line where it was located in states, and within twenty miles either side of the line where it passed through the territories. This grant, estimated to encompass between 47 and 60 million acres, constituted the largest land grant ever awarded by Congress.

The charter outlined the procedures by which the land was to be turned over to the company. After completing its preliminary surveys, the company was to submit a map of the general route of the line to the United States Department of the Interior. Upon receipt of this map, the government would withdraw from public sale, homestead, or pre-emption all odd-numbered sections of land lying within the limits as defined by the charter. The railroad could not take immediate possession of its lands, however. Only after each 25 miles of completed track had been inspected and approved by the government would the railroad be granted clear title to lands bordering the newly constructed section of track.

During the period between 1864 and 1870 several unsuccessful attempts were made to finance the enterprise. In 1869, negotiations were opened with the renowned banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., and by the beginning of 1870 an agreement was concluded. As the Northern Pacific's financial agent, Jay Cooke & Co. was authorized to sell $100 million worth of 7.3 percent tax-free 30-year bonds. The bonds, which were to be exchangeable at par (later raised to 10 percent over par) for the company's lands, were secured by a first mortgage upon all the "lands and property, real and personal" of the railroad. In May, 1870, Congress passed a joint resolution granting the railroad permission to pledge its as yet unearned lands as security for the first mortgage bonds.

Jay Cooke played a dual role in the enterprise. He and J. Edgar Thomson, a prominent Philadelphia railroad executive, served as trustees for the bondholders. Thus, not only was Jay Cooke & Co. responsible for the sale of the bonds, but Cooke took it upon himself personally to guarantee the interests of the investors.

In many respects the key element in the project was the land grant. Financial success was predicated upon the assumption that the proceeds from the sale of the company's lands would be used to redeem the first mortgage bonds. It was the job of the Land Department to promote and supervise the sale of these lands.
On February 1, 1871, the board of directors of the railroad named a five-member Land Committee, under the chairmanship of Frederick Billings, to organize the Land Department and oversee its operations. The Land Committee served as the link between the Northern Pacific's board of directors and the Land Department. The head of the Land Department, the land commissioner, reported to the committee which in turn reported to the board of directors.

Originally, the Land Committee was to consist of five members: the president of the Northern Pacific and four members of the board of directors. In May, 1871, the number was increased to six with the addition of the Northern Pacific vice president. The committee was abolished on March 6, 1872, but was reactivated on March 13, 1873, at which time the number of members was reduced to three. Billings chaired the committee until October 20, 1875, when he was succeeded by John M. Hutchinson.

Under Billings' direction, office space for the Land Department was rented in New York City; furnishings and supplies were purchased; a clerk, James G. Dudley, was hired; office books were opened; and in March a land commissioner, John S. Loomis, was appointed to head the department. Two other offices were opened: the Minnesota district office in St. Paul and the Pacific district office in Kalama, Washington Territory. All Land Department business between Lake Superior and the Rocky Mountains was to be handled by the St. Paul office; all business west of the Rockies was to be the responsibility of the Kalama office.

The main duties of the district offices were threefold: first, they were to supervise the examination and platting of the company's lands; second, they were to promote the sale of the lands; and third, they were to handle all the office work necessary to expedite the sales. In addition, the district offices performed a multitude of ancillary services. They answered inquiries regarding the company's lands; helped newly arrived settlers find temporary lodging and procure supplies, equipment, fuel, and other necessities; escorted excursion groups, land selection committees, influential investors, government officials, and others on tours of the line and the surrounding communities; reported on and attempted to prevent illicit logging in the vicinity of the line; sought to maintain good public relations with the local communities; and kept the New York headquarters informed about conditions and significant events in the districts.

Preparations to open the Minnesota district office were begun late in the spring of 1871. George B. Wright, who was hired in May to manage the office, sent out twelve teams of land examiners to begin inspecting and assessing the company's future lands. Most of the efforts of the St. Paul office during this first year were directed toward examining and mapping the lands in preparation for putting them on the market. In the spring of 1872, four local Land Department agents were hired to handle all sales in the vicinities of Duluth, Wadena, Audubon, and Glyndon, Minnesota. At the height of its activities, in the summer of 1872, the St. Paul office employed over forty persons with a monthly payroll of nearly $3,000. In addition to Wright and the local agents, there were five clerks, four draftsmen, two attorneys and their three assistants, and four field teams consisting of five to six men each.

Activity remained high throughout that summer. Several immigrant reception houses were opened along the line to provide temporary lodging for newly arrived immigrants who intended to purchase lands from the railroad. Colonists arrived regularly at the two recently established colonies near Hawley and Glyndon, Minnesota—the Detroit Lake and Red River colonies, respectively. Numerous persons traveled along the line in search of lands for themselves or for future colonies. In the late summer and early autumn, the St. Paul office was busy collecting agricultural and mineral specimens for display at fairs and exhibitions in the United States and abroad.

Despite the elaborate preparations and fevered activity, relatively few of the company's lands were sold in 1872. The first sales contract was not signed until the end of May, 1872, a full year after the St. Paul office was opened. Sales during that summer were greatly hampered by delays in getting the company's European operations and promotional activities underway. In November, Wright reported to Billings that of the more than 1,500,000 acres of company lands that had been examined in the Minnesota district over the last year-and-a-half, only 18,000 acres (about 1 percent) had been sold as of the first of that month. The poor sales of the 1872 season, coupled with the general financial malaise of the company, prompted Billings to order district operations cut back severely. Wright was forced to dismiss the local land agents and reduce his office staff. The following spring, Wright resigned and his duties were assumed by the chief clerk of the St. Paul office, James Buel Power.

In spite of optimistic projections, sales in 1873 were not much better than they had been in 1872. New colonies were founded in western Minnesota—the Yeovil Colony near Hawley and the Furness Colony near Wadena—but sales as a whole continued to fall well below Land Department projections. With the failure of Jay Cooke & Co. in September, nearly all Land Department activities in the Minnesota district came to a halt. The field operations were abandoned and only a skeletal office staff was retained. Expenses were further reduced by moving the district headquarters to Brainerd where other company offices were located. Thenceforth, the Minnesota office restricted its activities solely to performing whatever office work was necessary to expedite the company's land sales.

Ironically, the collapse of Jay Cooke & Co. achieved for the Land Department what no amount of labor had theretofore been able to accomplish. Land sales in Minnesota and eastern Dakota Territory mushroomed as settlers and investors from all over the country rushed forward to exchange their nearly worthless bonds for the company's valuable lands. By September, 1873, the Land Department had been able to sell only about 41,000 acres of land in the Minnesota district; by the end of the year, another 22,000 acres had been disposed of. In 1874, the company sold nearly 190,000 acres in Minnesota and Dakota Territory, over three times as much land as it had sold during the entire first three years of operation. In 1875, sales more than doubled again when the company sold in excess of 475,000 acres. By January, 1876, the company had sold a total of 728,000 acres in its Minnesota district.

The Land Department's operations were far less extensive on the West Coast than they were in the Minnesota district. Early on, the decision had been made to concentrate the resources of the Land Department upon opening the company's more accessible midwestern prairie lands to settlement as rapidly as possible. Therefore, it was expected that the West Coast office would function initially in somewhat of a caretaker capacity, watching over and protecting the company's lands until conditions were more favorable for their settlement. In March, 1871, the board of directors appointed John W. Sprague as general agent for the company's Pacific district and put him in charge of all company business (exclusive of engineering and construction matters) on the West Coast. As one of his multiple duties, Sprague managed the Land Department office that was opened at Kalama, Washington Territory, in June of 1871. Aside from putting several land examination teams in the field, most of the work of the Kalama office consisted of protecting the company's vast West Coast timber resources. Stumpage agreements were reached with some loggers specifying the amount they were to pay the company in return for harvesting the timber in a specific area. In order to discourage unauthorized logging, agents were hired to police the region and seize any logs cut illegally. This was a rather futile endeavor, as illicit logging was common in the Pacific Northwest at that time.

It was anticipated that in time the work of the office would increase to the point where it would require the services of a full-time manager. Sprague was unable to make such a commitment due to his other duties and political activities. In the spring of 1873, Nathaniel P. Jacobs was appointed assistant land commissioner and directed to take charge of the office at Kalama. Jacob's tenure there was short. He quickly came into conflict with Sprague and the company's managing director on the Pacific coast, John C. Ainsworth. Early in 1874, Jacobs was recalled and George B. Hibbard, superintendent of emigration in the New York office of the Land Department, was named to replace him.

The collapse of Jay Cooke & Co. in September, 1873, cut short whatever plans there were to expand the West Coast operations of the Land Department. The Kalama office, like its Minnesota counterpart, was forced to curtail its activities and lay off most of its personnel. In October, 1874, the decision was made to move the Pacific district office to Tacoma, the western terminus of the line. Office space and personnel were to be shared with the Tacoma Land Company, a townsite development company headed by Ainsworth. Hibbard was dismissed from his post in October of 1875 and Sprague was once again put in charge of Land Department affairs in the Pacific district.
Very few lands were sold in the Pacific district prior to 1874. The first sales contract was not signed until November, 1872, and only a little more than 6,000 acres had been sold by September, 1873. But the collapse of Jay Cooke & Co. had the same effect on land sales in the Pacific district as it did in Minnesota and Dakota Territory. Land sales on the West Coast tripled in 1874; by the end of that year, 17,000 additional acres had been sold. According to the Land Committee report of June 21, 1876, sales increased eightfold in 1875 when more than 144,000 acres were sold. By January, 1876, the company had sold a total of nearly 168,000 acres on the West Coast.

As originally envisioned, the Land Department was not only to be responsible for managing the company's lands, it was also supposed to help stimulate demand for them. Billings submitted a general plan for the organization of the Land Department to the board of directors in March, 1871, in which he wrote: "Directly connected with... [the work of preparing the lands for sale]...comes the work of emigration, and this is really the great work of the Land Department."

In order to undertake this "great work," the department needed a European representative. Throughout 1871, the Land Department's affairs in Europe were handled by George Sheppard, working out of the offices of Jay Cooke's London affiliate, Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. Sheppard familiarized himself with all aspects of the emigration business, established contacts with groups of potential emigrants, and organized a publicity campaign to promote the Northern Pacific and its lands. He reported regularly to Billings and to officials of Jay Cooke & Co. about affairs in Europe—especially insofar as they affected emigration. Plans for the creation of a network of local agencies in Great Britain and on the continent evolved during the fall and winter of 1871.

In March, 1872, Sheppard opened a Northern Pacific Land Department office in London and shortly thereafter appointed several agents to work in the agriculturally depressed areas of southwest England and Wales. In June another office was opened in Liverpool. After touring several northern European cities making contacts and assessing emigration prospects, Sheppard appointed Land Department agents in Paris, Rotterdam, Düsseldorf, Geneva, Gothenburg, and Christiania (Oslo), and hired a publicist to work in Berlin.

European emigration to Northern Pacific lands was relatively light in 1872, as the Land Department's European network was not in place until well after the peak of the emigration season had passed. In England, the leaders of several prospective colonies were contacted and plans were made to establish the Yeovil and Furness colonies along the line of the Northern Pacific in western Minnesota. The news of a particularly severe winter storm in the midwestern United States and uncertainty about the financial stability of the Northern Pacific enterprise helped hold emigration down in 1873. In July, after confering with Sheppard, the board of directors reduced the budget for the European activities significantly. With the collapse of Jay Cooke & Co. a few months later, the entire European operation came to a halt. Most of the agents were dismissed immediately. For a few months, talks continued with the promoters of a proposed Dutch colony, but shortly after these negotiations failed, the remaining offices were closed.

The hub of all Land Department activities was the New York office. Its primary function was to direct and coordinate the district and foreign operations. In addition, the office worked closely with officials of Jay Cooke & Co.—most notably Alvred Bayard Nettleton, agent for the trustees—to plan and conduct the massive publicity campaign that was being launched to promote the sale of the company’s bonds and lands. The office staff was relatively small, consisting of the land commissioner, the commissioner (later superintendent) of emigration, and several clerks. Theoretically, the Land Committee functioned in an oversight capacity while the actual head of the Land Department was the land commissioner. In reality, however, certain persons—Sheppard, for example—tended to report directly to Billings (as chairman of the Land Committee) instead of to the land commissioner.

Shortly after being named land commissioner in March, 1871, John Loomis departed for Minnesota to begin inspecting the company's lands and to inaugurate district operations. Except for a brief visit to New York, Loomis remained in Minnesota through the end of 1871. During his absence, the affairs of the New York office were handled by its chief clerk, James G. Dudley. While in Minnesota, Loomis escorted several excursion parties on tours of the Northern Pacific lands, and met with prospective investors and colony organizers. At the same time, he helped set up the Minnesota district operations and developed procedures for putting the lands on the market. These procedures called for the St. Paul office to prepare detailed plats of each section of company land from the examination teams' field notes. This plan, while ambitious, was extremely impractical, and it soon became apparent that the office staff could not keep up with the amount of work required to implement it.

In March, 1872, the board of directors ordered a total reorganization of the administrative structure of the company. As a result, both the Land Committee and the office of the land commissioner were temporarily abolished. Frederick Billings was appointed managing director of the Land Department and took personal charge of its affairs.

Billings' main concern was to end the delays and get the primary work of the department—selling land—underway as soon as possible. One of his first actions as managing director was to abandon Loomis' elaborate platting program and replace it with a far simpler one; thenceforth, only rough township plats were to be prepared. Another major obstacle was removed when Billings granted Sheppard the authority to commence full-scale operations in Europe.

Satisfied that the work would now proceed quickly, Billings began looking for a new land commissioner to take charge of the department, and in November, 1872, William Alanson Howard was appointed to this position. Howard assumed his duties as land commissioner in March, 1873, whereupon Billings stepped down as head of the Land Department and was reappointed chairman of the resurrected Land Committee.

Much of the energy of the land commissioner and the Land Committee chairman was directed toward influencing legislation and procuring favorable administrative rulings in Washington, D.C. Billings and Howard were in constant contact with the company's attorney and chief lobbyist in Washington, former president pro tempore of the Senate, Benjamin F. Wade. Most of the issues that were of interest to the Land Department concerned, in one way or another, the removal of what the railroad considered to be adverse claims to its lands. The company lobbied vigorously in favor of legislation to extinguish Indian claims, particularly those of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux in Dakota Territory. In order to set aside numerous private claims (and several put forth by other railroads as well), the company sought favorable rulings from the Department of the Interior specifying the exact dates upon which its land withdrawals became effective.

As noted earlier, one of the primary responsibilities of the Land Department was to stimulate demand for the company's lands. Both the promotional campaign and the European operations were directed toward this end, as were the activities of the commissioner of emigration for soldiers' colonies, George B. Hibbard. As his title implies, Hibbard's primary responsibility was to encourage the establishment of veterans' colonies along the line of the Northern Pacific. In the course of his official duties, Hibbard cultivated contacts with numerous veterans' organizations and incipient colony associations, provided information on the nature and availability of government and company land, helped negotiate land purchase agreements, and arranged reduced transportation rates for colonists and settlers intending to settle along the line. He also took a leading role in efforts to convince Congress to extend additional homestead and preemption benefits to Civil War veterans and their families.

In April, 1872, Hibbard was promoted to superintendent of emigration and given responsibility for supervising all of the company's domestic operations connected with immigration. In large part his new duties consisted of helping plan the itineraries and making the necessary travel arrangements for representatives of European colony associations or for influential European investors visiting the United States to inspect Northern Pacific lands. He was also responsible for supervising the construction and maintenance of the company's three immigrant reception houses in Minnesota. The following spring, anticipating the arrival of large numbers of European settlers and colonists, the Land Department opened an immigration office near the New York immigrant reception facility at Castle Garden. Sheppard and his agents kept Hibbard apprised of the departures of groups of emigrants intending to settle on lands bordering the Northern Pacific line. Hibbard arranged to have someone meet the immigrants upon their arrival in this country, made preparations for their safe passage to Minnesota (where virtually all of these immigrants were expected to settle), and helped them deal with any difficulties they encountered after their arrival.

The collapse of Jay Cooke & Co. forced the closing of the immigration office and the suspension of Hibbard's immigration work. The entire promotional campaign also had to be discontinued and the New York office staff was reduced to the absolute minimum needed to handle correspondence and expedite sales contracts and transfers of deeds.

The failure of Jay Cooke & Co. was the pivotal event in the early history of the railroad. "The great thoroughfare of the northwest" was discredited in the eyes of the public; it was blamed by many for causing the downfall of the highly respected banking house. This view was not entirely inaccurate, for while the railroad was not solely responsible for Jay Cooke's difficulties, it was undoubtedly one of the main factors contributing to the collapse of the firm. The loss of public confidence and the depressed economy made it difficult for the railroad to raise the funds needed to continue operations. Although land sales were up considerably, nearly all purchases were made with bonds, so that these sales, while reducing the company's bonded indebtedness, provided little in the way of operating capital. Despite attempts to raise money (by selling off investments or leasing or selling surplus rolling stock, for example) and to implement stringent cost-cutting measures (dismissing staff, cutting back operations and rail service, and halting construction), the company was able to stave off bankruptcy only until 1875. In April of that year, a federal judge ordered the company into receivership. Frederick Billings devised a bold plan for reorganization whereby the company could retire most of its outstanding debt and obtain the additional financing it needed to proceed. The reorganization, completed in September, 1875, enabled the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to embark cautiously on a new beginning.

CHRONOLOGY

Selected events in the history of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, 1864-1896

1864

July 2
Congressional act chartering the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

December 7
Company organized. Josiah Perham elected president; serves until January 5, 1866.
Perham's attempts to finance construction of the road through the sale of capital stock prove futile.

January 5
John Gregory Smith elected president; serves until October 1, 1872.

April-July
N.P. unsuccessful in attempts to obtain congressional subsidy for construction of the railroad.

May 7
Congress grants N.P. a two-year extension of the deadline for beginning construction of the road.

Board of directors continues its attempts to arrange satisfactory financing.

May
Board of directors commissions Edwin F. Johnson to undertake preliminary surveys and suggest potential routes.

N.P. unsuccessful in further attempts to secure government subsidy.

July 1
Congress grants a second two-year extension of the deadline for beginning construction of the road.

March 1
Joint congressional resolution allows N.P. to issue bonds secured by a mortgage on the railroad and the telegraph line to finance construction of the road.

April
Report on preliminary surveys prepared.

May 20
Preliminary arrangement by which Jay Cooke & Co. agrees to assume financial management of N.P.

June
Jay Cooke & Co. commissions W. Milnor Roberts to conduct additional surveys of the route.
1870

January 1
Final agreement with Jay Cooke & Co. signed. Sale of first mortgage bonds begins.

August 15

N.P. once again ordered into receivership.

1896

April 27

Second reorganization effected by a committee of bondholders.

August 31

Reorganized firm officially established as the Northern Pacific Railway Company, under the management of J. P. Morgan & Company.
Description of the Records – Roll Notes

LETTERS RECEIVED AND RELATED RECORDS, 1870-1876 (Rolls 1-14)

Rolls 1-14 contain letters, reports, circulars, flyers, announcements, telegrams, and other materials received by the New York office of the Northern Pacific Railroad Land Department between 1870 and 1876. The correspondents include a wide range of individuals: prospective land purchasers and colonists, Land Department agents and personnel, Northern Pacific corporate officials, agents and officers of other railroad and steamship lines, government officials, and representatives of Jay Cooke & Co. The principal recipients are: Frederick Billings, chairman of the Land Committee; land commissioners John S. Loomis and William A. Howard; superintendent of emigration George B. Hibbard; and the chief clerks of the Land Department, James G. Dudley and Augustus C. Wackerhagen.

The Letters Received and Related Records are arranged chronologically. For the purposes of description, they have been divided into three groups, each of which corresponds roughly to a different phase in the early history of the Land Department: 1870 - February, 1872; March, 1872 - June, 1873; and July, 1873 - 1876. Each group is introduced by a brief narrative that describes the materials, notes the predominant record types, summarizes the activities of the Land Department during that period, and points out subjects that occur frequently on all or nearly all of the rolls in the group. The introductory narratives are followed by roll notes that list in alphabetical order the major subjects dealt with or referred to in the records filmed on each roll. Both major topics mentioned in the narratives and entries of a more specific nature have been included in the roll notes. Because the topical relationships are often complex, references to certain types of information have, on occasion, been included under more than one heading. Descriptive phrases or subheadings indented beneath the main subject headings are intended to indicate subtopics of particular interest or to suggest the scope of the main entry. The headings and subheadings should not be considered either restrictive or all-inclusive.

In most cases, personal and organizational names do not appear in the roll notes. Researchers wishing to locate information about individuals and organizations should look for related subject headings in the roll notes, examine the narrative descriptions for references to topics not listed in the individual roll notes, and consult the selected list of authors on pages 60-63. For more detailed information about individuals, organizations, or particular subjects, the reader is encouraged to consult the Editor's Notes, which have been filmed on roll 38. Because both the description of the records and the author list are necessarily selective, it is possible that a topic may be documented in the records and mentioned in the Editor's Notes even though it is not referred to—directly or indirectly—in this guide.
The records for this period include only a few items from 1870. Most of the material dates from March, 1871, through February, 1872. During this period, the New York office was primarily responsible for directing and coordinating the operations of the district and foreign offices; handling negotiations and other matters involving colony organizers and major land purchasers; and conducting an extensive promotional campaign intended to encourage the sale of the company's lands.

The records contain considerable information on the establishment of the Land Department, the opening of its New York office, and the implementation of accounting, bookkeeping, and general office procedures. The elaborate campaign, undertaken jointly by the Land Department and Jay Cooke & Co., to promote the sale of Northern Pacific lands is well documented in the records. Preparing and disseminating promotional materials, arranging lectures, commissioning translations into European languages of particular promotional pamphlets, and placing advertisements in selected newspapers and journals were some of the more important activities associated with this campaign.

Much of the correspondence of the Land Department was carried on with colonization and land sales companies, particularly the New England Military and Naval Bureau of Migration and L. H. Tenney and Company. The former established a veterans' colony near Detroit Lake, Minnesota; the latter organized and operated the Red River Colony near Glyndon, Minnesota, and also acted as land agent for the Northern Pacific in the Red River Valley.

The records also contain valuable information about the activities of lobbyists (chief among them former Senator Benjamin F. Wade), legislators, and government officials in Washington, D.C., on behalf of the railroad. They sponsored and promoted the passage of desired legislation, encouraged favorable interpretation and strict enforcement of Department of the Interior regulations, and generally cultivated the good will of influential persons in the nation's capital.

Many of the letters on these rolls are of a routine nature: inquiries about the company's lands and their agricultural potential, the route of the line, the industrial and commercial opportunities in the regions to be served by the railroad, transportation and freight rates, possibilities for employment, and colonies and settlements adjacent to or near the line; solicitations inviting the railroad to purchase advertising space or to underwrite special projects; and requests for informational literature, maps, reduced fares or passes over the line, and employment as land agents, examiners, surveyors, publicists, and the like. A sizable number of the routine letters deal with the day-to-day operations of the office: ordering supplies; hiring staff; making or confirming appointments; paying bills; acknowledging the receipt of correspondence, vouchers, and reports; and maintaining regular communications with the district offices.
Many of the letters reveal the deliberations that underlay some of the more important policy decisions that were under consideration at this time, particularly those having to do with the sale of the company's lands. There is considerable discussion of such issues as: fixing land prices; paying commissions on the sale of lands; deciding upon the terms governing the purchase of lands; offering reduced fares or free transportation to purchasers; determining the proper direction and focus for the promotional campaign; and establishing a European network to stimulate emigration and funnel it to the company's lands. The records show that Jay Cooke was intimately involved in many of these early decisions.

Finally, the records for this period reveal a great deal about the establishment and organization of the Minnesota and Pacific district offices and about their field operations. Much of the information about affairs in the two districts is found in the reports submitted periodically by the district offices to the New York headquarters. During the first year of operation, most of the field work was concentrated in Minnesota, where the company's lands were being readied for sale to the scores of settlers who were expected to begin arriving in 1872.

ROLL 1. 1870 - July, 1871.

Yellowstone National Park.
Bill to establish.
March, 1872 - June, 1873
Rolls 5-11

The materials for this period document the operations of the Land Department at the height of its activities. The department expanded the scope of its operations during this period. At the same time, the nature of the work changed significantly. Whereas most of the activities conducted throughout 1871 had been of a preparatory nature (establishing offices and agencies, examining and appraising lands, preparing maps of lands to be sold, etc.), by the spring of 1872 the department was actually starting to carry out the work for which it had long been preparing—stimulating immigration, directing it to the line of the road, and promoting and ultimately selling the company's lands. It was a period of intense activity and enthusiasm; yet the campaign proved to be only moderately successful.

In many respects the activities of the New York office were the same as before. Many of the incoming letters continue to consist of routine inquiries, requests, and acknowledgments, as well as discussions of office operations, land sales, and transportation arrangements. There are fewer such letters, however, as increasing numbers of them were being sent directly to the district offices. During certain periods—in the spring of 1872 and the first few weeks of 1873, for example—routine inquiries are almost totally absent. Promotional activities still appear to have dominated much of the office work, although the emphasis had shifted more toward the distribution of existing materials than the production of new ones. One type of promotional activity about which there is considerable information was the practice of setting up elaborate displays of agricultural products and mineral samples at major fairs and expositions in the United States and abroad. Major policy questions, particularly those involving land sales and foreign operations, continued to be the focus of much attention.

The materials for this period contain much more information about emigration and related matters than do those for the earlier period. The records include numerous letters from emigration agents and colony promoters, in addition to regular progress and financial reports from the London office and continental European agents. There is considerable discussion of social and economic conditions in Europe, including information about the attitudes toward, prospects for, and regulation of emigration from various European countries. The records contain many details about the departures, arrivals, and itineraries of individual immigrants and groups. Also documented in these records are the operations of the Land Department's immigration office, which was established in the spring of 1873 near the immigrant reception terminal at Castle Garden, New York City, as a way station for newly arrived immigrants traveling to the company's western lands.

A great number of the documents come from the district offices, including periodic reports of office and field work. However, the monthly financial statements, which were also prepared by the district offices and forwarded to the New York office, are not found among these records. By early 1872, the classification and appraisal of the company's most valuable lands in Minnesota had been completed, and as a result the letters and reports tend to deal more with the sale of these lands than with the examination of them. Other subjects discussed frequently in the communications from the Minnesota district are: timber depredation (unauthorized logging) on railroad and government lands; affairs of the local Land Department agents; Indian affairs in Dakota Territory; United States government surveys; arrangements for the reception of colonists, settlers, and immigrants; conditions in various frontier communities along the line; and matters relating to several colonization projects, among them the Detroit Lake, Red River, Yeovil, and Furness colonies.

The Land Department operations on the West Coast were far more modest than were those in the Minnesota district. While there is a certain amount of information about office work and land examinations, most of the material from the Pacific district tends to deal with the railroad's attempts to prevent illicit logging in Washington Territory. The records also contain information on political affairs in the Pacific Northwest, including several conflicts in which John W. Sprague, general agent for the Land Department on the West Coast, was involved. One controversy of particular interest involved accusations that the state of Oregon had fraudulently designated as swamp lands certain tracts of valuable timber lying within the railroad's withdrawal limits.

The records reveal that the department was plagued by a number of problems during this period: the prolonged illness of key personnel and the incompetence of others; serious delays in preparing the lands for sale and in getting the European network organized and operating; sluggish bond sales; and a relatively low level of emigration. The railroad sold very few of its lands in 1872 and, despite the most optimistic projections, sales in 1873 were not much better. As a result, operations in Minnesota and Europe had to be scaled down considerably.

There is less evidence in these records of Jay Cooke's involvement with the Land Department than there was in the records from previous years. Although his banking house was still cooperating with the railroad in the promotional campaign, it appears that Cooke was not as involved personally in the formulation of company policy as had earlier been the case.

Political and legislative affairs in Washington, D.C., continued to be of particular concern to the railroad. Much of the material from Washington reflects the difficulties encountered by the company in its attempts to influence legislation and political appointments amidst increasing antirailroad sentiment and congressional hostility. Three issues dominate the letters from Washington, D.C.: the controversy surrounding the date on which the company's land grant properties were withheld from sale to the general public; land claims by the Sisseton and Wahpeton Sioux in Dakota Territory; and the dispute between the Northern Pacific and the St. Paul and Pacific Railroad regarding their overlapping land grants.

July, 1873 - 1876

Rolls 12-14

The materials for this period document the operations of the Land Department during a period of severe financial distress. Records from the summer and early autumn of 1873 are similar in nature to those for earlier years. The remaining materials are from the period following the collapse of Jay Cooke & Co. in September, 1873, and clearly reflect the impact of the subsequent financial crisis upon the operations of the Land Department. The correspondence diminishes markedly during this period, as the activities of the department were severely restricted.

Not only are the letters fewer in number, but their subject matter is far less diverse. Correspondence dealing with emigration and related matters, for example, decreased significantly following the cessation of European operations in the fall of 1873. Promotional activities virtually ceased after the collapse of Jay Cooke & Co., and subsequent correspondence with that firm tended to focus upon matters related to the trusteeship: cancellation of bonds; endorsement of deeds to lands purchased from the railroad; and settlement of Northern Pacific's outstanding accounts with the trustees. All field work in the districts was abandoned, and thenceforth the district offices dealt almost exclusively with matters pertaining to the sale of lands. Materials for 1875-1876 (roll 14) contain information about the impact that the receivership (April, 1875) and reorganization (September, 1875) of the company had upon the operations of the Land Department.

In many respects the records are similar to those described earlier, consisting of routine inquiries and requests, district reports, and other materials generally concerned with the daily operations of the department. A considerably larger portion of the letters is devoted to the disposal of lands, primarily in exchange for the now depreciated bonds, and to efforts by the company to discourage excessive land speculation.

Colonies.
Detroit Lake Colony; Red River Colony; Yeovil Colony; Furness Colony; proposed Dutch colony; other colonization projects.

Dakota Territory.
Land examinations; demographic estimates; development of Bismarck and Fargo.

Emigration.

LETTERS SENT, 1871-1876 (Rolls 15-32)

Twenty-five letterpress volumes containing copies of the outgoing letters of the New York office of the Land Department are filmed on rolls 15-32. In many respects, these letters constitute the "mirror image" of the incoming letters that were filmed on rolls 1-14.

Volumes 1-24 have been arranged in accordance with two different systems used by the Land Department to organize its outgoing letters. Under the system first employed, the letters were divided into three categories and kept in three separate series of volumes; those written by the chairman of the Land Committee, Frederick Billings; those written by the land commissioner, John Loomis, and by the chief clerk of the New York office of the Land Department, James G. Dudley; and those written by the superintendent of emigration, George B. Hibbard. Within each category, letters were entered into the volumes chronologically. The system was not perfect, however, as letters were occasionally copied into the wrong book. Volumes 1-14, filmed on rolls 15-24, follow the pattern described above.

A new system was instituted in September, 1872. Thereafter, letters were arranged by destination or recipient rather than by author, and thereunder chronologically. Volumes 15-24, filmed on rolls 25-32, reflect this arrangement. In some cases, however, letters continued to be filed according to the old system. Thus, volumes 1-4 (rolls 15 and 16) contain letters from Billings all the way up to August 13, 1875, and volumes 13-14 (roll 24) contain letters by Hibbard through July, 1873. The title of each volume in the roll notes that follow indicates the inclusive dates and either the source or the intended recipient(s) of the majority of the letters contained therein. Recipient indexes are located in the front of many of the volumes; they have also been refilmed together at the end of roll 32.

Volume 24 also includes a section devoted exclusively to letters relating to the International Exposition in Vienna. Volume 25 (roll 32) contains copies of outgoing telegrams arranged in chronological order.

In the following notes, certain volumes have been grouped together in order to facilitate description. Each of these groups is preceded by a general introduction that identifies the author or recipient, outlines his function, and indicates what subjects occur most frequently in the letters. Because the topics dealt with in the outgoing letters are similar to those found in the incoming materials, the introductory narratives for the Letters Sent are less detailed than are those for the Letters Received and Related Records. The introductory narratives are followed by roll notes that list in alphabetical order the major subjects dealt with or referred to in the records filmed on each roll. Descriptive phrases or subheadings indented beneath the main subject headings are intended to indicate subtopics of particular interest or to suggest the scope of the main entry. The headings and subheadings should not be considered either restrictive or all-inclusive.
In most cases, personal and organizational names do not appear in the roll notes. Researchers wanting information on particular persons or organizations are advised to look for related subject headings in the roll notes, and to consult the recipient indexes on roll 32 or the Editor's Notes on roll 38.

Volumes 1-4.
Chairman, Land Committee/Managing Director, Land Department, February 22, 1871 - August 13, 1875
Rolls 15-16

The four volumes filmed on these rolls consist primarily of the outgoing letters of Frederick Billings. As chairman of the Land Committee from February, 1871, to October, 1875, and as managing director of the Land Department from March, 1872, to March, 1873, Billings was the moving force behind the operation of the Land Department. Most of the letters date from 1871 and the first half of 1872, during which time Billings was integrally involved in establishing and managing the department. Billings' involvement in several early policy decisions (concerning the promotional campaign, transportation arrangements, and construction financing, among others) is documented in a number of the letters, as are his connections with influential persons in Washington, D.C. Many of the letters consist of more or less standard replies to inquiries about the company's lands, the route of the line, commercial and employment opportunities, settlement, transportation and freight rates, and requests for literature and maps. The recipients are in many cases the same persons who appear as authors in the Letters Received and Related Records. There are no letters between March, 1873, and May, 1874, with the exception of two from December, 1873.

Much of the material in volume 4 deals with Billings' personal business, especially stock sales and the purchase of land in Missouri. This volume also contains information on the plan for the reorganization of the company drafted by Billings in 1875.

Volumes 5-12. Land Commissioner and Chief Clerk,
March 28, 1871 - September 27, 1872
Rolls 17-23

The eight letterpress volumes filmed on these rolls contain general outgoing letters of the New York office of the Land Department. Most of the letters copied into these volumes were written by the chief clerk of the office, James G. Dudley, either in his own name or on behalf of the head of the department, land commissioner John S. Loomis. Many of the others were written by Loomis himself prior to his forced resignation in April, 1872.

These letters document the more routine activities of the New York office: carrying on daily office business; answering inquiries; arranging transportation and reduced rates for settlers and other travelers; directing the department's extensive publicity campaign; preparing and distributing promotional materials; and supervising and coordinating the operations of the district and foreign offices. Also included is information on the establishment of the Land Department; the organization and implementation of accounting, reporting, and general office procedures in the New York office; and the railroad's affairs in Washington, D.C.

Volumes 13-14. Superintendent of Emigration,
November 21, 1871 - August 2, 1873
Roll 24

Most of the letters in these two volumes were written by George B.
Hibbard, appointed commissioner of emigration for soldiers’ colonies on June 21, 1871, and promoted on April 1, 1872, to superintendent of emigration. Much of the material prior to April, 1872, deals with Hib-bard’s attempts to promote federal homestead legislation favorable to veterans, and to enlist the aid of veterans’ organizations in this cause. There is also much information about veterans’ colonizaton projects, most notably the Detroit Lake Colony in Becker County, Minnesota, sponsored by the New England Military and Naval Bureau of Migration.
Upon his promotion to superintendent of emigration, Hibbard was put in charge of all of the company’s domestic operations connected with immigration. His duties, as revealed by these letters, included such tasks as arranging for someone to meet land selection committees or larger parties of immigrants upon their arrival in the United States; providing an escort, often a translator, for their journey to the company’s lands; and making special travel and lodging arrangements for such groups. There is also information on the construction and maintenance of the immigrant reception houses in Minnesota. Many of the letters throughout the period document Hibbard’s attempts to arrange reduced transportation fees for immigrants and others traveling westward to take up residence on lands purchased from the railroad. Typically, the letters in these volumes are addressed to directors of various veterans’ organizations, colony organizers, prospective settlers, railroad and steamship companies, and the district and foreign agents of the Land Department. Most of the letters in volume 13 fall between November, 1871, and May, 1872. After the company opened its immigration office near Castle Garden in April, 1873, Hibbard split his time, working mornings in the uptown office and afternoons in the immigration office.
Volume 14 appears to contain letters written from the immigration of-cile, most of which date from May–June, 1873.

Colonies.
Detroit Lake Colony; Red River Colony; Yeovil Colony; Furness Colony; soldiers' and sailors' colonies; other colonization projects.

Volumes 15-21.
September, 1872-1876
Rolls 25-29

Each of the seven volumes filmed on rolls 25-29 contains letters directed to a different recipient or destination: Minnesota district (volumes 15-16), Pacific district (volume 17), foreign agents (volume 18), directors, officers, and attorneys (volume 19), trustees' agent (volume 20), and the United States Interior and Agriculture departments (volume 21). The majority of the letters for 1872 were written by James G. Dudley, chief clerk of the New York office. Following his death on November 25, 1872, most of the letters were written by Augustus C. Wackerhagen, the office's bookkeeper and later chief clerk. A few months after Wackerhagen's dismissal in January, 1875, James H. Johnson took over as clerk, and many of the later letters were written by him. These volumes also contain letters from Billings, Hibbard, Alfred B. Nettleton (trustees' agent), James B. Power (general agent, Minnesota district, recalled to New York for several months early in 1875), William A. Howard (land commissioner), and others. The bulk of the letters are from 1872-1874.

As in the earlier volumes, many of the letters deal with routine matters. Volumes 15, 16, and 17 (rolls 25-27) deal primarily with the affairs of the Minnesota and Pacific district offices, particularly matters involving colonies, sale of lands, exhibitions, changes in staff, and the financial difficulties occasioned by the failure of Jay Cooke & Co. The majority of the letters in volume 18 (roll 27) relate to the European operations of the Land Department: activities of the British and continental Land Department agents, proposed colonies, departure and reception of emigrants, transportation arrangements, exhibits, and finances. The majority are written to George B. Sheppard. The letters in volumes 19 and 20 (rolls 28-29) cover a wide range of topics but tend to concentrate more heavily upon financial matters, including the effects of the financial collapse in 1873, land sales, publicity, and political and legislative affairs in Washington, D.C. Volume 21 (roll 29) contains mostly routine letters about such matters as United States General Land Office regulations, receipt of land patents, and the construction of facsimilies of fruits and vegetables for display at exhibits.

Rolls 30-32 (part)

Volumes 22-24 contain letters sent to miscellaneous recipients. Many of the letters are replies to routine inquiries. The information contained on these rolls spans virtually the entire range of subjects appearing on previous rolls. One portion of volume 24 is devoted exclusively to letters concerning the International Exposition at Vienna, 1873. Volume 25 contains copies of telegrams sent from the New York office of the Land Department. Here, too, the subject matter is similar to that found on previous rolls.

ROLL 32. Volume 24. Miscellaneous Recipients, November 19, 1874 - December 30, 1875 (pp. 46-79); International Exposition at Vienna, October 17, 1872 - May 9, 1873 (pp. 1-45).

Recipient Indexes and Registers
Roll 32 (part)

As an aid to the researcher, the recipient indexes and registers which appear at the beginning of many of the letterpress volumes have been refilmed together at the end of this roll. In order to facilitate their use, they have been arranged in the following alphabetical order: all of the index pages labeled "A" are filmed together, all of the "B's" are filmed next, and so on. Four of the volumes (nos. 15, 17, 18, and 20) contain subject registers instead of recipient indexes. These registers are filmed after the recipient indexes.

The indexes and registers are neither complete nor totally accurate. They have not been systematically checked for accuracy. Where inaccuracies have been discovered, the correct information has been entered in brackets. Many of the indexes and registers from the later years are incomplete, and some volumes (nos. 4, 14, 16, and 24) contain no indexes or registers at all.

PRINTED MATERIALS (Rolls 33-37)

Rolls 33-37 contain all of the significant printed matter found in the early Land Department records. This material was removed from the correspondence so that it might be filmed together. Photocopies (identified as such) of printed items that were integrally related to particular records were filmed in place of the originals in the correspondence.

The printed materials found among these records have been augmented by a number of relevant items collected from several sources: other series within the Northern Pacific Railway Company records; the Minnesota Historical Society's Reference Library; and the Southwest Minnesota Historical Center at Marshall. These items, each of which is accompanied by a typed target indicating its original location, were interfiled with the printed materials from the Land Department records for filming.

The printed materials are divided into four sections, each of which represents a different type of publication.

1. Materials Issued by or on behalf of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, 1845-1876. Arranged chronologically. Includes materials issued by Jay Cooke & Co. relating to its financial agreement with the Northern Pacific, the railroad's land grant, and projected business of the road; materials issued by or on behalf of the Northern Pacific relating to its charter and amendments, the organization of the company, and the terrain through which the road was to pass; regulations, progress reports, blank forms, annual report (1876), and Northern Pacific land examiners' manuals; and materials relating generally to a northern route for a transcontinental railroad. The latter include descriptions of terrain, climate, natural resources, and possible routes; and appeals for congressional action and aid by, among others, Isaac Stevens, Henry Rice, Josiah Perham, Ignatius Donnelly, William Windom, and Alexander Ramsey.
2. Promotional Materials Issued by Colonization Societies, Land Companies, and Other Railroads, [1867?]-1873. Arranged alphabetically.
   Includes pamphlets, circulars, leaflets, maps, prospectuses, bylaws, regulations, advertisements, lists of lands for sale, and information for prospective settlers.

   Includes congressional bills, acts, resolutions, and reports (1854-1874); U.S. General Land Office circulars (1821-1874) and blank homestead and preemption forms (1860s-1870s); U.S. Bureau of Statistics report (1871); and State of Minnesota promotional pamphlets (1870-1872).

It should be emphasized that this collection of printed materials, although extensive, is by no means complete.

As a rule, authors have not been listed in the following roll notes. Researchers are advised to consult the author lists included in the Editor's Notes (roll 38) for such information.

ROLL 33. Materials Issued by or on behalf of the Northern Pacific Railway Company.

Promotional and informational pamphlets, leaflets, and circulars, 1845-1870.

ROLL 34. Materials Issued by or on behalf of the Northern Pacific Railway Company.

Promotional and informational pamphlets, leaflets, and circulars, 1870-1876.
Blank forms, 1870-1876.

ROLL 35. Promotional Materials Issued by Colonization Societies, Land Companies, and Other Railroads, [1867?]-1873.

Government Publications.

Congressional bills, acts, resolutions, and reports, 1854-1874.
LAND COMMITTEE MINUTES, 1871-1876 (Roll 37, part)

A great many of the subjects that appear in the Land Department records also appear in the minutes of the Land Committee. Of particular note are resolutions outlining the organization, activities, and purpose of the Land Department; instructions to the land commissioner, superintendent of emigration, and district and European general agents; contracts with L. H. Tenney and Company; an agreement with the St. Paul and Pacific Railroad settling its land grant dispute with the Northern Pacific; proposals made to the Mennonite commissioners; and reports on the progress and financial conditions of the Land Department.

The Land Committee minutes also include relevant passages from the minutes of the company's executive committee and board of directors, as well as copies of instructions and letters that pertain to the operations of the Land Department.

These minutes are not part of the original Land Department records. They are contained in a volume that formed part of a set of corporate records maintained by the Northern Pacific Secretary's Office. Only the index to the volume and the material through 1876 (pp. 1-185) have been filmed.

EDITOR'S NOTES (Roll 38)

Roll 38 contains the rough notes taken by the editor in the preparation of this microfilm edition. The notes have not been edited. It is hoped that they will be of some aid to the researcher, as they contain considerably more information about the records than could be included in this guide.

The Editor's Notes are arranged in the same order in which the records have been filmed. The notes contain details on the content of the records as well as lists of significant authors and recipients.
Selected List of Authors

MOST of the persons and organizations whose names appear in this highly selective list of authors either are of regional or national significance, or are of importance within the Northern Pacific Railroad Company or the Land Department. Each name is accompanied by the microfilm roll number(s) on which items by that author occur. The names listed below are from the Letters Received and Related Records (rolls 1-14) only; for the authors of the Letters Sent, see the author/recipient lists in the Editor's Notes (roll 38). Recipient information for the Letters Sent is available in the recipient indexes (roll 32) to the letterpress volumes. Although the majority of the authors referred to in the following list contributed letters of substantive research value, letters of a routine or perfunctory nature have been included selectively to indicate the range of the department's correspondence.
