REMARKS

VICE PRESIDENT HUBERT HUMPHREY

MINNESOTA-WISCONSIN SAVINGS AND LOAN LEAGUES

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA

SEPTEMBER 23, 1966

VILLIAN WILLA

It's good to be back home again.

Over the past few days I've been traveling throughout our country. Today alone I've been in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Indiana. I've been talking and I've been looking and listening to listening to Tonight, as I return home, I would like to take a few minutes to share with you some of the things that are on my mind and some thoughts about the times we live in.

One of the things that I cannot help but feel every day is this: Our American people -- in a nation that was not long ago isolationist -- are today remarkably well-informed people of the world.

Wherever I go I find that people have a good grasp of the fundamental currents moving throughout the world.

And I find that they realize, more fully than we might suspect, how closely what we do at home is tied to peace and safety in the world.

It was only a few years ago that we Americans talked about foreign policy and domestic policy as if they were neatly compartmentalized and had nothing to do with each other.

"Foreign policy" was something carried on by the State

Department at diplomatic receptions and in European drawing

Thems. "Domestic policy" was something involving wages, the rate of unemployment, politicians and voters. Unless we were involved in war overseas -- or contagious depression at home - the two seldom got mixed up together.

The time has long since passed when any nation could live isolated from its neighbors. The time has passed, too, when any nation with believe what happened inside its own borders its own business, and nobody else's.

And the people of our nation know the.

The violence in our city streets and the unfinished business of civil rights are just as much a part of our "foreign policy" as the plight of the developing countries and wars of national liberation are a part of our "domestic policy."

We have faced the fact that our ability to meet our responsibilities in the world depends ultimately on the strength, growth, and freedom of our own American society.

And we have set ourselves straight ahead on a course to build a stronger...a growing...a freer America.

Basic to all our efforts -- both at home and in the world -- is an economy both of expansion and of justice.

We have had the right ingredients for economic vigor for a long time -- the initiative of our businessmen...the skill of our workers...the productivity of our farmers...the ingenuity of our scientists and technologists...the vision and enterprise of men and women such as yourselves.

Police Production

But, during the 1950's, this superb economy of ours was working in fits and starts.

as sometimes like a cha-cha-cha on a crowded dance floor -- back and forth with a hesitation step in between.

In the economic growth league we were way the in the second division.

Now, we are in our 67th straight month of economic expansion -- the longest and strongest economic expansion ever experienced by any nation, anytime, any place.

And here I must slip in a commercial:

Our growth didn't happen by accident. It happened in large part because your government adopted and implemented modern economic policies -- policies which promoted growth rather than frustrating it...policies which created a climate forward.

Every productive element in our society has shared in the dividends of our growth. Profits are up, wages are up, farm income is up.

willstoon at the singing of

The Prendenthan asked american Curiness to exercise self. desception on prices + Profits He has acked falorto Deckouly those way increases justified by improved Productivity He has Asked all america to Meerus Self Musepline He is asking augues to limit appropriations He is cultury gavernment Literates too Hi - Money to Prices have gone up too -- but less than in any other major industrial country. And we stand committed to turn back the threat of inflation. But we are meeting this threat, and will continue to do so, with caution and with even-handed measures.

We do not intend that only a few in our society should carry the burden of heading off what is a threat to all of us.

That is why the President and the Congress, as you the know, have taken/initiative in these past few days to help those hurt by credit shortages. We cannot cut off credit from those who need it most.

tons of steel, bushels of wheat, dollars and many other material things. But we are even richer in human resources -- and we mean to be richer yet.

We know by experience that investment in people yields a higher return than any other kind.

Therefore In the last three years we have more than doubled our federal investments in health and meducation.

We seek to roll back the ravages of physical and mental illness, and to ensure to as many Americans as possible the blessings of sound bodies and sound minds.

We seek to assure to every young American the opportunity for all the education he can absorb -- so that he can achieve his full potential in our society.

If history, as H.G. Wells wrote, is "a race between education and catastrophe," we mean to win that race with Educ.

We have launched an all-out war against poverty -- the first nation in history to do so .- not to make lawity more to make the Emancipation Proclamation a reality -- to match our creed with deed.

The progress we are making in this country is far beyond what would ever have been predicted as we entered the 60's.

But we cannot be satisfied. We know how much is left undone we are a restlies Resplication and seeking to move alread - to improve to develop.

We know that our cities must be safer and seeking

We know that our cities must be safer and greener and healthier places to the

We know that our rural people, and rural communities, must receive a fairer share of our prosperity.

We know that our air must be made more fit to breathe and our water more fit to drink.

We know that there are still too many doors of opportunity closed to the knocking, knocking, knocking of our fellow citizens.

Left outside in the emptiness of poverty and discrimination.

We are determined to keep our nation growing. We are, as a people, determined to expand the frontiers of hope and freedom for all who live in our nation.

But, in this nuclear age, we are not so short-sighted as to believe that we can live in splendid, prosperous, happy isolation in a world of turmoil, poverty and hunger.

Nor can we justify in our own hearts what we do at home if we seek less for our fellow men in other places.

That is why we have committed ourselves to the building of a world living in the spirit of the United Nations charter -- a world where large and small nations alike may live in diversity and in peace.

That is why we have pledged ourselves to programs which help weak, struggling and young nations create strong, free and stable societies.

That is why we resist aggression which would threaten the works of nation-building.

The challenges we face ahead -- both at home and in the world -- will not be small ones. But I, for one, believe our people will be able to meet them.

America's story is the story of brave, compassionate and adventurous people.

It is the story of neighbors helping each other.

It is the story of someonint and

Valuatery agencies working to gether

It was a Story of

It is the story of people plowing untilled land...of cities and towns built from the ground up.

America's story is the story of men and women -immigrants or the children of immigrants -- reaching out for a new and just society.

It is the story of a nation breaking down old barriers... of a people filled with optimism and faith.

It is the story, above all, of a people determined that each new day can be better, then the next, and that each generation shall break through to a new realization of its hope.

If there is a people destined to meet the challenges of our times, it is the American people. I believe we shall succeed.

Minnesota Historical Society

Copyright in this digital version belongs to the Minnesota Historical Society and its content may not be copied without the copyright holder's express written permission. Users may print, download, link to, or email content, however, for individual use.

To request permission for commercial or educational use, please contact the Minnesota Historical Society.

